

Hoof anatomy is an important, often-overlooked part of pre-purchase evaluations.

One of the most important pieces of advice I can give a client who is horse shopping is to be as proactive as possible. Paper your contracts, hash-out the nuts and bolts prior to transferring the horse.

Things in the industry are changing, do not be caught one-step behind because you took something on faith that could've been avoided if you had expended the resources up front to negotiate and execute a contract.
